Central Erin Mills

Community Profile

History

The Credit River valley was exclusively the domain of the Mississauga (native band, part of the Ojibway tribe), from the late seventeenth century to the early nineteenth century.

By 1820 the area known as the Central Erin Mills Planning District was available for settlement, following the second purchase from the Mississauga band, including the area they had previously reserved, which extended for one mile on either side of the Credit River. The pioneers followed quickly, and an 1877 map shows the area dotted with farm houses.

Early in the 1830s William Comfort built a mill on the Credit River, which became a refuge for William Lyon Mackenzie during the 1837 Rebellion. The Barber Brothers established their woollen-mill on this site in 1853, and the village of Barbertown, now part of the Central Erin Mills, was born. McCarthy Milling still operates a grist mill in these buildings.

Another local industry was brick making, which gives McFarren Blvd. its name. The first commercial brickyard was established in 1880 and operated for over a century.

By 1983, when the present district plan was being prepared, Central Erin Mills was largely undeveloped. Today, Central Erin Mills is a growing community, with family homes and green space, and a landmark Town Centre.
