2010 - 2013 Project - Phase 1 Mississauga Bus Rapid Transit (BRT)

The Mississauga BRT Project will see the creation of a dedicated east-west transit corridor (busway) across Mississauga which will run along Highway 403 (combining the use of the existing bus by-pass shoulders), Eastgate Parkway and Eglinton Avenue corridors, connecting Winston Churchill Boulevard in the west to Renforth Drive in the east.

Once operational in the spring of 2013, busway services will complement and connect with local bus service, inter-regional transit and the TTC subway, linking high-density development and employment centres across Mississauga. Designated stations along the BRT corridor will provide connection points for passengers.

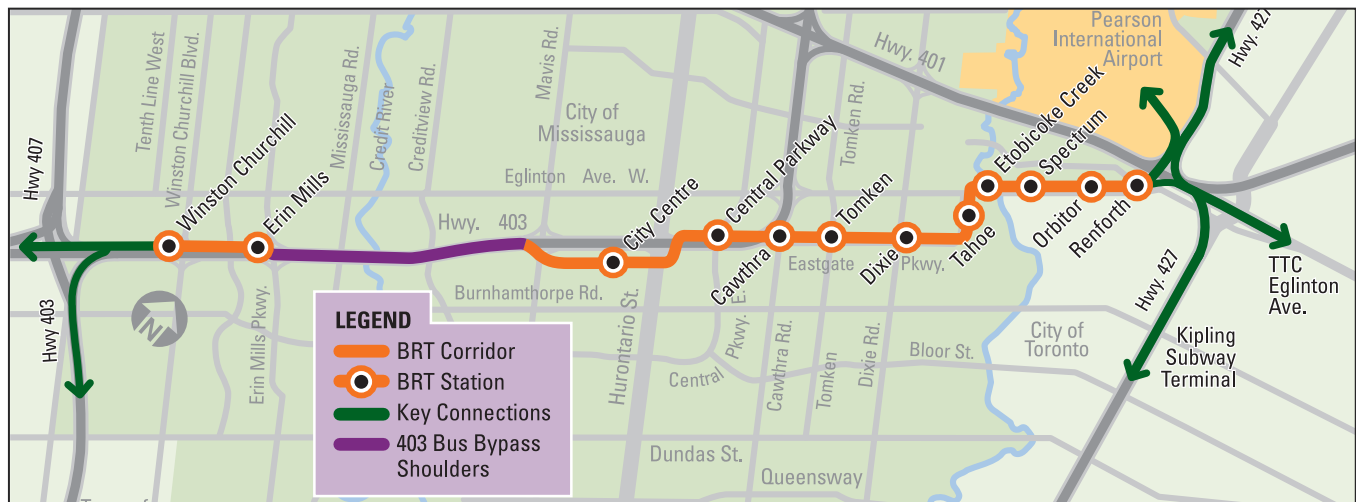

The Mississauga BRT Project is a cooperative effort between the City of Mississauga, GO, a Division of Metrolinx, the Province of Ontario and the Government of Canada.

Once built, the Mississauga busway will have twelve stations at major road crossings and connect with the transit terminal at Square One as indicated on the corridor map below.

The contract for the first phase of construction has been awarded to B. Gottardo Inc. This first phase of construction will extend from Rathburn Road east of Hurontario Street, and run east along the Highway 403/Eastgate Parkway corridor up to Fieldgate Drive. Phases two and three have yet to be tendered and will extend the transitway from Fieldgate Drive northerly along Eastgate Parkway and extend easterly along Eglinton Avenue to Renforth Drive.

Construction for the first phase is anticipated to commence in November of 2010, with a completion date of late 2012.

These construction works will require lane restrictions and traffic diversions at various times to permit construction to proceed. The opening of the BRT is anticipated for spring 2013.
