42 Queen Street South is a two-storey house located at the southwest corner of Queen Street South and Henry Street.

Statement of Cultural Heritage Value or Interest

The property has physical, design, historical, associative and contextual value.

The property has historical value as it is associated with William Graydon and his son, John Graydon, prominent builders who constructed the subject house, as well as notable Streetsville landmarks, including the Orange Lodge and the Douglass/Franklin House. The property's association with John Graydon is particularly of interest as he went on to become a significant businessman and community leader. He owned several businesses, including ones related to building different aspects of Streetsville, including the local rail line. He was Reeve, Justice of the Peace and County Warden.

The property has contextual value as it is also historically related to its broader surroundings, as a number of the surviving 19th century buildings are credited to this family.

The house has physical and design value as a rare example of residential Georgian architecture in Mississauga.
